

Thinking for a Change is a cognitive behavioral therapy program for youth involved with the Juvenile Court's traditional probation department. This group meets once per week with a designated Probation Officer to address the thought processes and habits that lead to a youth's at-risk behavior. The Thinking for a Change curriculum incorporates different role play scenarios, social skill development and problem solving skills so youth learn how to recognize and positively change their thought-patterns and habits.